

< Upper, middle left: Two movie theaters in southern China. Either out of business or struggling to survive, the cinemas would sadden a movie fan with fading posters and outdated banners. The names of the theaters were probably written by local celebrities in political or cultural circles, proving the glory that no longer exists. (Sanya, Hainan Province / Hupu, Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region)

< Lower left: With a solid exterior wall, cubic columns and triangular door lintel, the movie theater reflects traces of old castles in Europe in both structure and detail. The red roof added later seems a bit strange. (Tianjin)

> Right: A temple established in a traditional siheyuan courtyard in Beijing. The solemn religious air fits well with the reserved space in the courtyard. (Beijing)